

What came down must go up. McGill is taking Place Mercantile to court over the demolition of Strathcona Hall, a minor landmark. (See story below)

Strathcona Hall

McGill landmark demolished

by Brahm Resnik

A ballyhooed union of urban development and urban aesthetics has ended in courtroom acrimony as McGill University lawyers have sought an injunction against Place Mercantile to prevent construction on the site of the demolished Strathcona Hall.

Strathcona, built in 1904 with funds donated by Lord Strathcona, a principal benefactor of McGill University, presently lies dismembered in numbered blocks in a contractor's warehouse.

Strathcona Hall became part of the $50 million Place Mercantile complex on Sherbrooke and McGill College in November 1980 when McGill sold it along with other properties to the Mercantile Bank, principal tenant and controlling partner of the complex.

According to a memorandum of agreement signed by both parties at the time of the sale, Strathcona Hall and the facades of four greystones alongside it were to be preserved and incorporated into Place Mercantile.

Strathcona quietly disappeared in mid-July after designers and engineers had discovered that there were insurmountable structural problems.

McGill's original application in Québec Superior Court for a preliminary injunction in August was dismissed, and the court will hear its application for a permanent injunction on October 15th.

According to Sam Kingdon, McGill's Director of Physical

Resources, the University will desist if the developers rebuild a facsimile of Strathcona Hall.

The Place Mercantile builders submitted an alternative proposal, a glass and masonry structure utilizing parts of the original stonework, which was rejected by the University in mid-August. When the builders refused to accede to McGill's request and the original memorandum of agreement, legal proceedings were instituted.

Officials at the Mercantile Bank failed to return phone calls made by The Daily. Officials at the Donolo Corp. refused to answer questions on Strathcona as the case is before the courts.

A number of questions have arisen regarding the circumstances attending Strathcona's dismemberment: Why was the project so far along when it was discovered that the building was structurally unsound and what to make of the builders' casual disregard for a memorandum of agreement? Strathcona's fall has clearly cast a pall on the university's and the developer's noble intentions at the time of the sale.

After negotiations for Strathcona were completed in November 1980, McGill officials happily talked of the environmental sensitivity of the developer, and the developer, Devencore Realities, declared that the business and academic communities should have more in common than they seem to. It was hoped that the integrated construction plan would have a positive influence on future development in the area. Even if the plan seemed odd, Strathcona's future seemed secure.

"It struck me as weird that they (the builders) would tear Strathcona down now," said Orest Hummeny, former editor of the Canadian student architecture journal, The Fifth Column, immediately after Strathcona was dismantled.

Board battles the budget

by Mary O'Neill and Albert Nerenberg

The big three: budget cuts, higher tuition fees, and increased student enrolment dominated the open session of this Monday's Board of Governors meeting.

The Principal, David Johnston, outlined the compression of McGill's finances as a "13 per cent reduction in the real budget over the last four years." Meanwhile, over the same period, student enrolment grew by 11 per cent.

It looks as if we'll be up a little in enrollment," Johnston said, "But the statistics are only in the preliminary stage."

According to Johnston, overall enrollment rose between 1 and 3 per cent since last year. The Arts and Science faculty had an even higher rate of increase. (See McGill Notes for complete enrollment figures,

Windsor faculty walk off the job

Windsor (CUP) — University of Windsor's 525 faculty members walked off the job Monday morning after a 36-hour negotiating session failed to produce an agreement.

The Board of Governors cancelled classes in the second week of winter session for 7,400 students in Windsor and three affiliated campuses in Sarnia, Catham and Leamington.

It also ordered non-academic staff, who are unionized, to report to work. Donald Laing, President of the faculty association, said he did not mind them crossing faculty picket lines, because, for example, the students in residence still must be fed.

University President Mervyn Franklin said his office would do everything it could to keep all university buildings functioning.

The strike is the first ever at the University of Windsor and the first faculty strike in Canada since a week-long walk out in the Technical University of Nova Scotia last year.

The faculty are asking for a 13 per cent salary increase in each year of a two-year contract.

The university's Board of Governors wants a one-year contract. The Board claims it's final offer as a total package is worth 13.8 per cent, which would be the sixth highest settlement this year among Ontario's fourteen universities. The faculty claims the package is only equivalent to a 12.7 per cent increase.

Paul Cassano, the Administration's Vice Principal Academic, said a major disagreement is delaying the contract. "The administration does not want to be tied to a two-year contract due to the uncertainty of provincial funding," said Cassano.

The faculty voted 93.5 per cent in favour of a strike September ninth, as the two sides entered into all-night negotiations this weekend.

After the negotiators gave up and went home to sleep, the Board of Governors surprised the faculty with a "final" offer at 6:30 Monday morning, ninety minutes before the strike was to begin. The association decided not to attempt a response to the complex 22-page offer before the deadline.

"I have no idea why it hasn't been presented earlier," said Laing. He added that the offer had many confusing aspects and "a number of items were not addressed, such as the faculty pension plan."

The faculty association met at 10 a.m. Monday to consider the final offer, and voted to reject

"This was particularly pleasing because it was thought that these faculties (Arts and Science) would shrink," he said.

Governor Joan Dougherty, former chairperson of the Montréal West Protestant School board, noted that students were still being turned away from certain faculties. In which areas, she asked, is more space for students needed.

"Where are the pressures for expansion?" she asked.

Johnston replied that the faculties of Law, Medicine, Management, Engineering, Dentistry and Architecture were particularly overburdened. He stressed that in these faculties there is a very high ratio of applications per available space.

"In view of those pressures, is there any way that McGill can expand by converting space to accommodate these pressures?" asked Dougherty.

Johnston said, "It is very difficult to accommodate change in these areas of pressure. Resources have been stretched to the breaking point."

Dougherty asked whether higher tuition fees might be a possible means of countering the enrollment burden.

"Isn't one of the first things to budge, (the issue of) not raising the fees?" she said.

"What is McGill's position on this? McGill seems to subscribe to some sort of illusion of free education as a long term goal. This is just unrealistic. Wouldn't you support the push for higher fees?" Johnston replied "this must be considered in the political context."

According to Johnston, larger fees would not necessarily mean more money for the University.

"Tuition fees are entirely controlled by the government. We are essentially only playing the role of fee collectors," he said. "Increased tuition fees will simply go to reduce the government grant we receive from Québec City."

Vice-Principal Planning and Academic E.J. Stansbury said that tuition fees would have to be raised dramatically to be of significant aid. "An increase of five to six percent wouldn't go too far," he said. Tuition fees represent ten per cent of our income. If you double them, they would take care of the next two years budget problems."

He continued, "A twenty per cent increase might be politically reasonable, but doubling (tuition fees) and still not solving our budgetary problems would be totally unacceptable."

Governor R.C. Bennett suggested that the government's raising of tuition fees could have far-reaching political ramifications.

"From a political point of view," he said, "no opposition spokesman would want to antagonize a large block of voters by saying they support higher tuition fees."

been obvious for about two years, especially on the McGill College side of the building. It was obvious that there were massive problems, even to the layman."

Professor Derek Drummond, Dean of the School of Architecture who was contacted before the case went to court in August was also left wondering about the Strathcona sag.

"Surely they knew (about structural unsoundness)," said Drummond, who has been involved in the case as a member of the University's standing Architectural Advisory Committee. "One of the purchasers of the property is a contractor — Marc Donolo. Surely he knew."

Due to all parties' reluctance to discuss the case at this time, it is difficult to determine how much the Donolo Corp. and the Place Mercantile knew, whether Strathcona was doomed all along or whether the builders were taken unaware.

According to Georges Thibodeau, one of the three project architects at David, Boulva, Cleve, the designers and engineers had to wait until McGill moved its offices out of Strathcona last April 15 to do a thorough inspection of the building's structure and foundations.

"We couldn't leave the building as it was," said Thibodeau, who was also reached before the case went to court. "It was a total structural wreck."

"There were no plans available for the building. We had just a sketch from Dominion Bridge which didn't say too much about the understructure."

Six years after the Place Mercantile project went to the drawing board, the builders finally discovered a foundation which had been rotting for almost 60 years.

"Fifteen to twenty years after Strathcona was put up a tunnel was built through the mountain from Central Station to Town of Mount Royal, and the tunnel went under the building," explained Thibodeau.

"When the tunnel was built the water table dropped considerably. The wood piles in Strathcona's foundation had been wet but when the water table dropped they were left to dry and they started rotting."

Stanislaw Kapuseinski, also one of the project architects, was reached last week to comment on the glass and masonry structure submitted as a replacement for Strathcona.

"I've been asked not to discuss the situation with anybody at all for obvious reasons," said Kapuseinski. "I hope one day we will be able to discuss it freely."

The most controversial aspect of the Place Mercantile project had been its forced marriage of Strathcona's cream-colored sandstone and the facades of the four greystones with the aluminum glitz of a 24-story office tower.

"The original idea was to try and retain the streetscape of Sherbrooke so the University wouldn't have to face a 24-story building right on the streetline," said Drummond.

"The building (Place Mercantile) is imposing as it is. The facades are supposed to save the campus from encroachment. Personally, I don't like the idea."

Some passersby have remarked that the facades in front of the office tower give the complex the air of a Hollywood set.

The renovated Strathcona Hall was to have been occupied by the Institute of Canadian Bankers. Place Mercantile is scheduled to open next spring.

Red spray-paint slogans equating the Star of David with the Nazi Swastika appeared on the Bronfman building and Ghetto walls earlier this week. Members of the Jewish community at McGill criticised the graffiti as an ineffective way of dealing with the political situation and being essentially anti-semitic.

Anti-zionist graffiti hits McGill

by Leonard Goldberg and Moira Ambrose

Graffiti comparing Zionism with Nazism appeared this week on several McGill campus buildings.

Red swastikas equated to the Star of David were spray-painted on the Bronfman management building and Hillel House, the Jewish student centre, after the massacre of hundreds of Palestinians in Lebanese refugee camps. The word Palestine, in capital letters, was painted in front of the Union Centre and on sidewalks in the student ghetto.

Jeff Simboli, spokesperson for the Israeli Public Affairs Committee at Hillel, called the artwork "another excuse to display anti-semitic hostilities." He considered the graffiti an "ineffective way of dealing with (Israeli political problems)."

Feryal Ari-gauhar, spokesperson for the Committee for Solidarity with Lebanese and Palestinian People, said the graffiti is "very effective. It serves a purpose to make people aware and to serve as a constant reminder (of the massacre)."

"People have forgotten about the Armenians and the Jews. People will forget about the Palestinians," she said.

She feels the graffiti is "not anti-semitic, it is anti-Zionist." She termed it an expression of a new concept some people are adopting called "judeo-nazism."

Later in the conversation Omran said he was against all graffiti "because it is defacing and ugly."

He opposes Zionism and says "anti-semitism has been exploited by Zionism to bring more immigrants to the occupied territories."

"For us the Star of David has become the symbol of death and destruction among Palestinians," he said.

Edmond Omran, a representative from the Palestinian Liberation Organization's information office in Montréal, said he is against the graffiti "if it is anti-Jewish," but not if it is anti-Zionist.

Student Council President Jim Boyer told the faculty they should consider their academic responsibility and continue teaching during the negotiating deadline.

One professor responded by saying, "This strike could be the best education students ever get!"

Student battles class conflict

A first year management student circulated a petition among Management and Economics students last week concerning the conflicts caused by the cutting and re-scheduling of certain sections of Economics 200D. Students were only notified of the changes on registration day. The department cut one section and rescheduled two others. The petition, which collected 533 signatures, demanded the reinstatement of the four sections at their previously scheduled times.

Prof. protests massacre

Professor Basil Rattray of the Department of Mathematics is cancelling his lectures this Friday to commemorate the Palestinian massacre earlier this week.

"I want to do something to indicate my feelings about the event," he said. "I think other people should think about it too."

According to news reports from the major wire services, extremist factions of the Lebanese Christian Militia murdered several hundred Palestinian refugees (estimated to between 170 and 1800 civilians). Allegedly, the extremists had been permitted into the camp by Israelis who are occupying the area.

People like to give McGill money

The Board of Governors gleefully received news this Monday that the University's plans to encourage people to give it money are on schedule, despite the recession.

"The economic situation is a difficult one but we're really pleased with how its going" commented a jubilant Principal Johnston after receiving news of a half-million dollar donation.

Mr. Wong, a McGill graduate, donated the sum asking that it be used as funding for bursaries and architecture scholarships. The university administration has called the donation a "leadership gift" as an example for future gift-givers.

Johnston believes that more gifts of this type are on their way.

"We reckon that we now have 18-20 million dollars identified as lead gifts to come," he said.

In addition to its annual fund-raising campaign, McGill is organizing a North American drive to locate and pressure graduates and corporations interested in donating. According to Johnston, planners are searching "to find out where the giving potential is."

Behind boardroom doors

The Board of Governors meets in closed session during the latter part of its meetings. Public as well as press are denied entrance. Presumably this is when important or controversial matters are discussed. As well, Board members have continued their policy of declaring themselves unphotographable during Board meetings.

Board has new gavel wielder

Hugh Hallward assumed the chair of the Board of Governors after the end of the last school year. Hallward replaced Chief Judge Alan B. Gold.

He joined the Board five years ago as the Graduate Society's representative. Hallward, a director of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Southam Corporation and the Montréal Expos baseball club, comes to the board with the necessary experience and mind-set.

Muting fr. minorities

"Protect the One" would have probably been a more appropriate title than "Protect the Few" for Pierre Goad's editorial on the Deschênes's judgement in last Wednesday's Daily. The core of Deschênes's argument was indeed to be found in his insistence on the supremacy of individual rights over collective rights. It is in this sense that this judgement represents an important defeat for the French minorities in other provinces, in spite of Jean Chrétien's brilliant analysis.

Let's examine the arguments.

Québec alleged that the Canadian Charter of Rights, with regard to the education clause, protects collective rights over those of individuals. Thus, Bill 101 limits, but does not abrogate, the rights of the English minority of Québec. The limitation of rights is permitted by virtue of article 1 of the Charter.

Deschênes replied that Québec's position discloses a totalitarian view of society which has no roots in Canada. In a group of 100 persons, the Judge continued, if one member is denied his rights because of a restriction resulting from a particular collective right, the rights of this person are abrogated, not limited. Bill 101, therefore, abrogates individual rights and any argument about the limitation of rights is superfluous.

The fact is that Bill 101, totalitarian as it may seem, was written to protect the French collectivity of Québec within Canada as the old protections, namely the Church and the parish, disappeared during the Quiet Revolution. As individuals, we had the option of learning English separately and of forgetting about "je me souviens" as the francophones in other provinces often have to do if they wish to survive as individuals within an English milieu.

If we wanted to keep on living as French individuals in Québec however, it was necessary first of all to protect our collectivity. Thus, in the language area, collective rights were considered to be of the utmost importance.

Collectively, the English minority of Québec is well protected. A quick look at their institutions and at the control they exercise over them is indicative of this fact: McGill and its board of governors, The Gazette and its editorial board, CBC in Québec and its administrators, just to name a few. What the anglophone Québécois need then, to improve their lot, is greater rights as individuals.

What of the French minorities in other provinces? Let's take the Franco-Ontarian community as an example. Individually, they can often attend a French school. Collectively, they are denied control over it. So, following Deschênes's judgement, their individual rights are only limited, which as mentioned above, is permitted. Their situation is constitutionally valid and if they want to improve it, they have only to deal directly with their provincial leaders as they have been doing without success for many years.

The situation of French minorities in the Western provinces vis-à-vis the Canadian Charter of "individual" rights is even more contradictory. The Charter grants them the right of education in their own language if "the number justifies it". Thus, they have to prove that they are "numerous" enough to benefit collectively from their limited individual right.

Let's point out here that North American Indians are presently demanding collective rights in a Canadian society in which the individual, as Deschênes has stated, represents the most important value and in which, individually, one is at a greater advantage when educated in English within the framework of Western tradition.

Nobody is denying the importance of the individual: we are not that totalitarian. Moreover, the Québec Charter of Rights is generally considered to be more comprehensive than the Canadian one. This is simply to point out that in a country where many collectivities cohabit, it is sometimes necessary to uphold collective rights over those of the individual.

Deschênes's judgement is among the first which concerns the Charter. Its importance is not, of course, that it will permit a few individuals to have access to English school nor that it touches the sacrosanct Bill 101. It gives little more than a moral victory to the English minority of Québec and a moral defeat to Camille Laurin.

The true importance of the judgement stems from the fact that it will be continually referred to in further disputes concerning the Canadian Charter of Rights. For example, a poor education in French (or in a North American Indian language) in which there are few facilities and in which there is no control by the recipients over the institutions constitutes a limitation of an individual right. Denial of access to Westmount High, if you come from Alberta, is an abrogation.

Who is a biz wiz

What is AIESEC? AIESEC stands for Association Internationale Des Etudiants en Sciences Economiques et Commerciales. It is an independent, student-run, apolitical, and non-profit organization of business and economics students. (Even though it is an association encompassing students from the economics and business faculties, we welcome any students from any department or faculty attending McGill.)

To date, it is the most extensive student organization of its kind in the world, including 400 member universities of 58 different countries. Canada joined this active, international association in 1959 and presently has chapters in 28 universities.

AIESEC is seen by many influential businessmen such as, Fred H. MacNeil, C.O.E. Bank of Montréal, as "a Canadian organization, that has done more to develop internationally trained managers than any other I have come across."

AIESEC activities during the past years and the year to come are:

- International Job Exchange: Each year, AIESEC successfully operates an international work exchange program which involves over 5,000 university students. Students from any one of the 58 member countries are available to work for terms of 8 weeks to 18 months. Here, both the students and the companies that hire them benefit from each other. The company benefits from having a highly motivated employee while he/she learns about the foreign country's culture and business practices.
- Career Days: AIESEC's commitment to provide a better understanding of the business environment, involves over 30,000 Canadian students annually. McGill's AIESEC Career Days will be held on the 20th and 21st of September from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. in the Union Ballroom. This Career Days conference is not held for recruitment services, but to let students establish contacts, and having a small chat with companies' representatives. This year, we are proud to host major companies such as Bell, C.I.P., and Petro-Canada.

- Conferences: These are undertaken in order to improve our relations with our business communities. Formal, well-known speakers, are invited to make speeches dealing with economic and variable business issues.

- Seminar Training Program: This is a special program that occurred during the summer of '82. It was designed to enhance the Past Summer Exchanged AIESEC's Students from overseas, to enrich their experience while on a traineeship. Speakers from the private sectors and prominent McGill teachers were invited to inform us on issues dealing with subsidiaries in Canada, Government intervention in the business sector, Canada-U.S. business relations, and Canada's potential with developing countries.

After having heard the speaker, workshops were designed to inform our overseas AIESEC'ers more about the issues discussed and more about Canada's competitive advantages and problems as well.

I hope, that you are well imbued with AIESEC. The only step to undertake, dear students, is to join us because: "Your opportunity is to join us, ours to have you."

People under occupation

PLO: "A cheap work force for Israel"

by Julien Samuel

This interview with Edmond Omran, a P.L.O. representative, was conducted in Montréal. It aims to describe the situation of the P.L.O. now and its relationship with current crises.

Daily: What is the socio-economic position of the Palestinians?

Omran: The Palestinian society is not a homogenous society. We have two categories of people; those who live in cities outside Palestine and those who live in camps under occupation. Of 4.5 million Palestinians, one third live in refugee camps in the Gaza strip, the West Bank, Jordan and Syria.

Daily: Can you describe the socio-economic situation in the camps?

Omran: Basically you are talking about the people under occupation. Their economic situation has been changed since the Israeli occupation. Most of the Palestinians have become a cheap work force for the Israelis. They work for various industries and agricultural works. The Israeli policy has been to undermine any movement toward independence. They have expropriated their lands and have restricted the water sources. The Palestinians have had no choice but to become a cheap work force for the Israelis.

Daily: What help have the support groups given to the Palestinians?

Omran: In terms of helping them regain their homeland? As you know most people here are brainwashed by the Zionist press and American propaganda. The P.L.O. were considered terrorists, not human beings.

It was hard to develop any kind of support even among the progressive forces. For the past 2-3 years we have seen many delegations from North America go to Palestine and they realize that these were not the people they read about in the newspaper. They came back and told a different story to their groups and movements. So a change in opinion is taking place. Most recently views have changed because of the barbarity of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon.

Daily: What is the role of women in your struggle?

Omran: Women play a very important social and political role. It is the one instance within the Arab world, which is traditional and conservative, that women have maintained and have continued to promote social change. The struggle has demanded co-operation from everyone. Women have participated in the armed struggle but mostly in the social struggle. If you don't have that (the social struggle), you can't move forward. The Palestinian women have their own union, which is the third most important (union) in our society. They have representatives in the Palestine National Council which is the Palestinian parliament. They have 20 per cent of the seats — a really rare thing in the Arab world.

Daily: What are the consequences of Arafat meeting with the Pope?

Omran: Arafat has been meeting with a lot of personalities in the western world and this is part of our diplomatic offensive. We want to gain recognition especially in those places which don't support our basic rights. The armed struggle is just part of the whole thing; the political moves are more important. We see this meeting with the pope as being a big step.

Daily: What is the P.L.O. going to do now?

Omran: We will continue on all fronts. Firstly, the resistance in the occupied territories will continue and will intensify as long as the occupations persist.

Daily: How is that possible?

Omran: Yes it is very difficult, but it is possible. One just cannot just crush a people under guns. People will find a way to resist. Wherever there is oppression there will be movements of liberation.

Daily: Are not the P.L.O. scattered throughout the Middle East?

Omran: The P.L.O. does not just amount to the 8,000 people who left Beirut. Our main militancy comes from the Palestinians in the occupied territories. The dispersion of that many people does not at all mean the end.

Daily: How do you feel about George Habash?

Omran: We consider him as one of the most historical and important figures in our movement. He is not alone. We have many people like him. We are proud to have him. Some people might not agree with his views but it is part of our democratic set up.

Feature

Daily: Which countries are helping the the P.L.O.?

Omran: One thing that we have learned is to depend on our own people for human resources: financial and political. We get help from many countries that support our cause: Greece, Austria, Spain, Mexico, and Cuba. This shows that we are not supported just by communist countries, we are also supported by Third World countries and some western European countries. It goes without saying that South Africa does not support us. We are not supported by the El Salvadorean junta, but we are supported by the salvadorean people.

Daily: What about the invasion of Lebanon?

Omran: Israel has tried to crush the P.L.O., both militarily and politically. In our estimation, they have failed. For two months we stopped them from coming into West Beirut. It is not that they did not want to invade fully — they could not. They want to establish a region which will be under their control and influence. They want a dependent regime that will sign a peace treaty with them and to establish a market for Israeli and American products.

Also it is important to note that there are water resources in lower Lebanon that they have had their eyes on for a long time. We believe that Israel will never leave South Lebanon. They will continue to try to establish a puppet dictator in the region. It did not quite succeed with Gemayel who was offed as soon as he tried to show some independence. We accuse the Israelis of killing him.

Daily: Can Israel establish a dictator of their choice in Lebanon?

Omran: It depends on how much freedom the Americans give them. Both the U.S. and Israel are trying to play a role in Lebanon. There is competition between the two.

Conspiracy in Beirut

What we are witnessing in Beirut today is a conspiracy of the United States of America and Israelis with the Christian Right Wing. The actual figure of the massacred is clearly unknown. But since Israeli attacks against the Palestinian people in Western Beirut, thousands of innocent children, women, old people, etc., were massacred mercilessly by the terrorist governments of Israel and the U.S.

The gross execution started with the illegal invasion of Southern Lebanon, then a fierce advance towards Beirut, then the Muslim sector of Western Beirut, finally a cowardly criminal indiscriminate shooting of innocent people in a refugee camp after the pull-out of the P.L.O., to emphasize the fact that it was done in a most unprecedented, inhuman and barbaric way. The whole world was shocked to the bones and terrified to see heaps of corpses on t.v. that have been butchered by both the Israelis and the Christian Right Wing. The justification the Israelis used to give for the invasion of Lebanon was the presence of the P.L.O. Now that the P.L.O. is no longer there, they are still carrying their dirty, inhuman and barbaric missions of massacring the Palestinians in Lebanon. All this inhuman, senseless and dirty work would have never taken place without the support and aid of the U.S.A. government. After all, it is the money of American taxpayers that the Israelis are using to kill innocent people.

Israel today has proved beyond all reasonable doubt to the whole world that it is a "racist state" aimed at killing, crushing and eliminating the Palestinians. This came about when the whole world condemned Israel's march into Lebanon as a "flagrant violation of human right and international law." The world, and even some Israelis themselves, believed that "Begin's Lebanon war is purely unnecessary, it is inhuman, and ultimately it will bring about the exact opposite of what was originally claimed." What is equally true is that, whatever the fate of the P.L.O., the problem of the Palestinians will not disappear. It has been present since the founding of Israel in 1948.

The unprecedented massacre in Beirut is a threat not only to the Palestinians and the Lebanese, but to the international community. Therefore, enough is enough. Israel and its supporters should be stopped, otherwise, the price they will pay in the near future is going to be a very costly one.

We, the Islamic Society of McGill University, and the Muslims of Canada and the United States of America, have completely, totally and absolutely condemned this type of genocide done by the Israelis in Lebanon.

We're looking for Engineering and Computing Science graduates who want to develop their resources.

And ours.

Syncrude Canada Ltd. is one of the world's largest and most advanced synthetic fuel producers. And we've barely scratched the surface at current production of 129,000 barrels per day.

Offer us your energy for ours, and we'll offer you participatory management. Which means if you've got something to say, you'll get the chance to say it. Just like our more experienced voices. It's a good change to get farther, faster.

We also encourage continuing education, with more than 400 courses of professional interest. In addition to all the courses you can take just for fun.

And when it's time to relax, you'll find McMurray is a dynamic city, with all sorts of pursuits to interest you. First run theatres, first class fishing, a fine recreation centre, and a lot of nice people to sport with.

There's something else to keep in mind. The chance to really stretch your mind. We're constantly tackling new things. And you could be the one to make technological history. Things you develop today, could be used by industry professionals for all time. If this appeals to you, complete an application for either permanent or summer employment through your placement office.

Commission can't handle racism complaints

by Jean-Marc Gallant and Abbas Mohaghegh

"The Québec Human Rights
Charter is the Best"

"The Québec Human Rights Commission is the worst"

So read a placard at a demonstration held yesterday morning to protest the fact that the Québec Human Rights commission has done almost nothing in dealing with cases of oppression of Québec's minorities.

A declaration issued by the Afro-Asian foundation (AAFC), the demonstration organisers, stated: "That the rights and freedoms of visible minorities be protected through the enforcement of the law in its fullest sense."

According to Sebastian Alakatusery, Executive Chairperson of the AAFC, there are inadequate systems set up to deal with racism in Québec.

"The problem is that there exists only one institution (The Québec Human Rights Commission (QHRC)) to investigate charges of racism in Québec," he said.

Alakatusery said that the QHRC has done little to combat racism in Québec, citing examples of its poor track record in investigating racial issues.

Alakatusery believes that the QHRC's inquiry into alleged discrimination against Haitian taxi-drivers this summer was ineffective. As well, he said it has not acted strongly enough against a racist cartoon that appeared in Le Journal Montréal several weeks ago. He added that a date has yet to be set for a formal inquiry into these allegations.

AAFC is asking for a provincial Royal Commission to be set up to investigate the entire racism issue in Québec.

"I would like to see a commission which has more money allocated," he said. "One that is genuinely concerned with the treatment of Québec's minorities."

Asked why the turnout was small at the demonstration (there were only a handful of people present), Ronald Joseph, an AAFC member, said there were two reasons for the poor attendance.

"The march took place during working hours, as well, some people may be afraid for their jobs."

The AAFC is awaiting a response from the Human Rights Commission.

MERCI!

To The Daily,

My congratulations to all the Other staff who contributed to the Other Handbook put out by the Daily Publications Society. The Other editors, Pierre and Brahm, have indeed produced a work of great quality.

Throughout the Other Handbook, McGill is treated with respect that rarely sweetens into pious deference, and with understanding that never sours into apology. Alternative politics, alternative lifestyles, and even alternative, self-peddled, transportation all receive their due. Self-help articles abound. And Brian Topp's history of the Students' Society is the most complete, the most succinct and the most piercing analysis of our fellow-elected masters that I have ever seen.

All in all, a masterly work. And to Pierre and Brahm I say "Bravo!" Their editorial exhortation to "get out and understand it all" is a superb motto, for through understanding comes the confidence needed to lead to the promise of the future.

Daily Atrocities

To The Daily,

At first I could not believe your printing of True American Atrocities. But upon reflection of The Daily, I no longer found it hard to believe.

Stooping Down

To the Daily,

I would like to congratulate Mr. Julien Samuel on his fine abilities at self-expression and topic selection as demonstrated by his articles on the Montréal Film Festival and the interview of a South African political refugee, (The McGill Daily, September 15 and 16 respectively.) While poor Mr. Terauds is a shock casualty after only a few days here at McGill, I was grateful for the gentle reminder that non-western cultures possess ideologies that one must not only translate into English, but stoop down to read.

Possibly Mr. Samuel over-emphasizes the bond between ideology and art, but only sharpened knives penetrate. I don't know of any artist who can afford to be stateless. Whether the art-form and the State "rub against each other" or not depends on the State, the artist and the art-form. The reality is that sometimes sparks form and sometimes not. The flash is spectacular.

The suggestion that Mr. Samuel enroll in undergraduate philosophy deserves consideration. Perhaps he will abandon his tenacity for "deriving some morbid form of pleasure from tearing everything to shreds whether it be within his reach or not." Mental Masturbation 101, 201 and 301 will offer him easier things to grasp. World Crisis Solving (a.k.a. The Myth of Sisyphus) and the Phenomenology of Western Perception are only offered at the graduate level.

I agree that it was unfortunate that more Third World films were not available but as Mr. Terauds pointed out, many of these countries don't even have a film industry. Until these countries can afford special effects it is only fair that their entries be screened. As for the problem these countries have with their "developing," possibly the Direct Film Co. or Fotomat, whose fast services we all enjoy, would be benevolent enough to open franchises in the Sub-Continent. Maybe then some of the Third World countries could get their film developed in time for next year's film festival.

Mr. Terauds, it is an inspiration to see your enthusiasm for eager reading continues, despite your myopia.

Scotty is lost in space

To the Daily:

I wish to lodge a public complaint regarding the organization of the "Scotty" event which took place on September 17th, 7 p.m., in Leacock rm. 132. Although the event itself, along with most other Welcome Week events, was well advertised, there was one large error made on the part of the Program Board: nowhere was it mentioned, either on the posters, the Welcome Week schedule, or in The Daily, that advance tickets would be on sale, let alone required, for this event. However, upon my arrival at 6:30 p.m., a half-hour early, I was told that the event was sold out and that only those who already had tickets would be allowed in. Needless to say, I was not the only one shocked by this news; there must have been at least 200 people who did not know that advance tickets were being sold. I think that this shows nothing short of poor organization on the part of the Program Board, and I expect a public apology to be made to all the students who were inconvenienced by their neglect to properly advertise the event.

Perhaps in the future, more accurate publicity should be supplied, and since this event was for McGill Welcome Week, tickets should be available to the public only after a three-day courtesy period to the students these events are brought in for.

Insecure beginning for New Year

To the Daily:

This past weekend marked the beginning of the Jewish New Year and for the first time that I can remember, there was a security guard present in my synagogue, and most other synagogues during the services. Words themselves cannot convey the disgust I felt at the intrusion and the situation necessitating their use.

I cannot think of any other religious institution that has required the services of a police force in their place of worship. Imagine the outcry that would ensue if a terrorist attack oc-cured in a church or mosque in North America or Europe, but such an attack on a synagogue, a place of worship, seems to demand no such outcry. I am sickened by the morals of the world that does nothing and is not in the least disturbed by terrorist attacks on an innocent population, a more moral population than those constituting the two religions that spawned from it.

We can't take this sitting down

To the Daily:

Yes I am "sitting in a classroom with too few chairs in it..." (The McGill Daily, Sept. 15, p. 2), and I am angry. I did not "just sit there..." I went and told The Daily. To my disappointment, no one on The Daily staff could remember the bulletin encouraging us to bring our complaints to them. The only excuse given was that the bulletin was probably a gimmick to attract people to The Daily. Instead of being attracted, I am repulsed that something of that nature was printed without seriousness, when it is an issue of great concern to students this year.

Not only are the classrooms over-crowded with not enough chairs to seat everyone, but professors have had to draw the line on how many students to accept into their classes. For example, one of the film courses would only function with 30, however, over 60 students registered for that class. U3 students were accepted first and then U2 students' names were pulled out of a hat! To make the situation worse, the course will not be offered next year. Many courses have been cut altogether, including prerequisites to courses being offered.

Should we sit back and accept this situation? Perhaps going to The Daily is not the solution but at least unifying ourselves and voicing our complaints is a step in the right direction.

War inevitable

(RNR/CUP) — A Harvard medical school professor says the risk of nuclear war is increasing, due to incompetence, mental instability and drug abuse among soldiers at nuclear weapons facilities.

Dr. James Muller says the army removes 5000 soldiers from nuclear assignments each year — mostly for alcohol or drug abuse — including about 250 each year dismissed for using LSD or heroin.

The risk of an accidental nuclear attack grows, Muller says, as the superpowers build more complicated weapons — reducing the warning time before an attack — and as Third World countries gain access to nuclear arms, without the technical expertise to control them.

"We've gotten away with avoiding an accidental nuclear war," Muller says, "for 20 or 30 years, but we can't get away with it forever."

Army needs better press

(RNR/CUP) — Retired Army General William Westmoreland says the only way the U.S. can win wars in the future is to control the news media.

The former U.S. commander in Vietnam says the media — especially television — was to blame for creating an atmosphere of public discontent which crippled the military's ability to win.

RCMP pay summer visit to the Ubysey

VANCOUVER (CUP) — The RCMP paid a summer visit to the office of the Ubysey, the student newspaper at the University of B.C., after the paper released details of the force's surveillance operation of SUB bulletin boards.

Corp. Michael Ryan told the newspaper staff that he was "disappointed" the paper ran an editorial Aug. 11 criticizing the RCMP investigation. Ryan said the paper itself was now under investigation.

The police were looking for references to the group "Direct Action", which claimed responsibility for blowing up a B.C. Hydro power station on Vancouver Island during the summer.

The summer paper also ran the phrase "Direct Action" instead of the regular logo on the editorial page.

Experts say unemployment affects mental health

(RNR/CUP) — While economists debate whether we're in a recession or a depression, many people are suffering from both.

It's well known that high unemployment brings an increase in mental health problems, and now researchers at John Hopkins University have calculated exactly how joblessness affects society.

For each one per cent rise in unemployment, they say, four per cent more men and two per cent more women are committed to state mental institutions. With the same one per cent unemployment rise, four per cent more people of both sexes commit suicide, nearly six per cent more are murdered and four per cent more wind up in jail.

McGill made history 106 years ago when they hosted Harvard in Canada's first football game.

Keeping the tradition of novelty alive at McGill

by J. Pierre Asselin

In the world of sports, McGill University holds a very special position indeed.

The first football game ever played in Canada was played here at McGill against Harvard University in 1874.

A few years later, in 1882, the first ever hockey game in North America was held at McGill, against Queens University.

As well, a McGill team participated in the first rugby game, this time being beaten on the road by Harvard.

Last Thursday, the members of McGill's PSI UPSILON fraternity were proud to continue the school's trend-setting tradition, and played the first ever Midori Melon Ball game in Canada.

The game is a combination of volleyball, dodgeball, and ping-pong. Rules are similar to those for volleyball except that the ball must bounce once on the ground between each hit.

Midori Mellon Ball emerged from Fort Lauderdale, Florida, this spring, where 1200 college students learned the game during the traditional "spring rites" ceremony. The game has since spread to a number of colleges in Florida, California, and New England.

In the very near future, Harvard will send its own team to dispute a tournament against the PSI UPSILON fraternity. One more first for McGill!

Soccer: the game they shouldn't have played

by Takane Chloe Aizeki

Last week-end one of ups and downs for the McGill Redmen soccer squad, as they were downed by the Plattsburgh Cardinals 2-1 on Saturday, and overcame the University of Québec at Trois Rivières 2-0 on Sunday.

The Plattsburgh game should be called the "Game they shouldn't have played." The Redmen were embarrassed in front of a 300 Plattsburgh fans, when the Cardinals netted two goals in a boom-boom fashion in the first half.

Plattsburgh forward Jaime Parra scored the first goal. A goal by Cardinal sweeper John McDonagh soon followed, in a free kick blasted past McGill keeper Stephen McCammon.

A shot by McGill that ricocheted off the cross bar whizzed past goalie John Sovay's hands, but the referee did not consider it a goal. McGill coach Gord Gow, angered by the ref's obvious error, bombarded the official with a barrage of protests, and received a yellow card in return.

The Redmen looked very much out of control in the first half, as they missed scoring opportunities and made defensive mistakes.

McGill shaped up in the second half, and came up with a goal of their own. Throw-in specialist Marc Noe threw a perfect pass to the head of forward Hasham Adel-Raman waiting near the right post.

Noe, a nineteen-year-old midfielder who hails from Annandale, Virginia, is well-known for his powerful, precise throws.

Saturday's game was not the perfect example of McGill soccer, however. The Redmen were without four of their starters, including forward Graham Butcher, much missed in the forward line. Also, the team was not "psyched", it was only an exhibition game for the Redmen (league play for the Cards) — an opportunity to test out young players, and different tactics. The team was also troubled by the rules of the American referees, which caused confusion during player frustrated Trois-Rivières forward.

Rookies Tony Iachetta and Alastair MacDonald proved to be welcome additions to the "Iron Curtain," playing their defensive positions well.

Coach Gow was not overly thrilled by the team's performance over the week-end, but his tone was optimistic.

"We played well enough to win those two points," he commented after the victory over U.T.R. "Of course, it will take time to get together and mature as a team."

The team is filled with amazing talent this year, and the squad should prove formidable within a few games.

They will play their next match at Molson Stadium on Wednesday, September 29th at 8:30 p.m. against the Concordia Stingers.

changes.

Midfielder Steve Johnston and defender John Kwamya displayed fine performance. The two veterans played a consistent game, pouring on their best effort.

Sunday's game at Trois-Rivières was the first league game for the Reds. They went out there to win those valuable points, and that they did.

The team showed overall improvement both defensively and offensively.

McGill controlled the infield throughout the game, and the Redmen offense shook up the Trois-Rivières defense by pushing the ball up mercilessly.

McGill scored their first goal when forward Graham Butcher headed in a free kick off the foot of Mike Kondro.

McGill's deadly "Iron Curtain" defense fizzled a dangerous direct free kick attempt by U.T.R. which could have very well tied the game.

In the second half, midfielder Mike Kondro scored off a rebound shot by Steve Johnston to further McGill's lead at 2-0.

U.T.R. had a few scoring opportunities themselves, but they lacked the final polish to get the ball past McGill keeper Aldo

Braccio. A small fight erupted when McGill defenseman Tony Iachetta crashed into a
